Helping Early Care and Education Providers Reduce Challenging Behaviors and Promote Positive Ones

4 Steps to Behavior Help

1 Gathering Information

First, the Behavior Help

Coach meets with the child care provider and the child's parents/guardians to understand the behaviors taking place. The Coach assesses relationships and interactions in the care setting using a formal observation tool called the Climate of Healthy Interactions for Learning & Development.

2 Creating an Intervention Plan

The Coach works with the care provider and parents/guardians to design a plan of approaches and strategies that may help support the child. Every plan is unique. The goal is to enhance supportive environments and relationships that promote social-emotional development, which in turn will reduce challenging behaviors.

3 Coaching & Implementing Techniques

The important adults in the child's life collaborate to put the plan into action. During this time, the Coach is available to provide support to the care provider and parents/guardians as needed. This can include modeling strategies, providing tools, and facilitating communication. Services usually last 6-12 weeks.

4 Wrap-Up Services

After the coaching stage has concluded, the Coach will conduct a formal check-in to evaluate the ongoing effectiveness of the newly implemented strategies. The Coach will remain available to answer questions and provide support during this time.

Is there a child in your care who you feel...

- ✓ Exhibits frequent and/or extreme challenging behaviors?
- ✓ Takes too much of your attention away from the other children in your care because of challenging behaviors?
- ✓ Is becoming a concern to you and/or the other families you serve?
- ✓ You have tried to help with every trick up your sleeve, but nothing seems to work?
- ✓ You are considering asking the family to leave your program?

If you answered "Yes" to two or more questions, Behavior Help Wisconsin is ready to support you.

The Behavior Help Team

Your Behavior Help team will have expertise in early childhood care environments, practices, and curricula; infant and child mental health; child development; and relationship-based strategies for promoting positive behaviors, emotional regulation, and social skills.

You will work directly with a Behavior Help Coach, who may choose to include a Social-Emotional Development Consultant with additional expertise in the field of infant mental health.

Our Approach

We believe all young children can develop healthy social and emotional skills with time, practice, and targeted support.

A child who struggles to communicate her/his emotions in an appropriate way can resort to expressing them through what adults see as challenging behaviors, such as hitting, biting, screaming, and refusing to listen. By teaching the adults in that child's life – their parents/guardians and child care provider – techniques and tools to support the child's social-emotional development, the child will learn new, healthier ways to express emotions, and the challenging behaviors will reduce and be replaced by positive ones.

Our approach is strengths-based, relational, and culturally attuned.
